

Ayden's Adventures : How it all Began

Real Grandpa showed real Ayden how to make aeroplanes with wooden clothes pegs and they pretended to fly them around the house. Gran heard the buzzing noises as they climbed higher into the sky (going up the stairs) then landing on a suitable place somewhere upstairs.

Making the clothes peg plane

They both enjoyed reading the BBC Wildlife magazines together and seeing photos and maps of lots of different animals in lots of different countries. After long conversations they decided to pretend to fly with the clothes peg planes and visit different animals all over the world.

Finding out about Wildlife

One sunny day they went up the hills at Swanswater near the city of Stirling and were lucky to see hundreds of peacock butterflies amongst other animals, trees and birds. Being high up, they saw more mountains way in the distance . The idea for Ayden's Adventures storybooks was beginning to form!

Outdoors

When the story was written the illustration content was decided. A series of photographs of Ayden and Grandpa were taken and developed into sketches, then line drawings before tone was finally added.

Making the first book

Ayden and Grandpa needed the special clothes peg planes to fly around the world so drawings and models were made. After final decisions were taken, images were produced for the book by illustrator Christy Danniels and more story models were developed by the author Graham Horn

The Clothes Peg Plane

The colouring book includes the line drawings of the storybook illustrations. The coloured pages can be cut out then trimmed to make a wall frieze.

Ayden's Adventures : Colouring book

Some of the models that can be made with paper, card and glue and are part of the 'Ayden's Adventures' story. The reader can make them and create new adventures of their own.
